This grant application requests funds to purchase a Zeiss LSM510 scanning laser confocal microscope to be housed at Indiana University's School of Medicine. Among the many strengths of a confocal microscope are its ability to simultaneously and non-invasively detect multiple fluorescent signals, with high resolution (better than 1-micron optical sectioning) and in three dimensions (three-dimensional, or 3-D, imaging). In addition, confocal microscopy is unique in its ability to provide quantitative information on fluorescently-tagged proteins or other biomolecules and their localizations in tissue sections. Such information is critical to our ability to understand such complex processes as cell differentiation or signal transduction. In addition, confocal microscopy is rapidly becoming a key technology in the rapidly expanding field of bioengineering, in which researchers use it to study the effects of the mechanical or chemical microenvironment of cells on their growth and functions. This grant request is made on the basis of a strong need for this technology among a variety of investigators on the Indiana University School of Medicine campus. The requested equipment will be housed in the newly built Cellular and Molecular Imaging Shared Resource Facility. This facility, officially opened in June, 2000, already contains instruments from the former Cellular and Molecular Imaging Center, the Microscope Usage and Services Facility, and the Confocal Microscope Facility. The new center will continue to provide support for all of these technologies in an improved fashion, and in addition will offer service on confocal microscopes. The new center's central confocal microscope will allow investigators to satisfy their current needs as well as to rapidly address a broad spectrum of current biomedical research needs. Investigators from all four Indiana University schools (Medicine, Purdue University, Arts and Sciences, and Nursing) will use the LSM510. The broad and active biomedical research community of Indiana University, now centered on the School of Medicine, requires the availability of this unique, state-of-the-art confocal microscope. Q: How to merge two array and make it become a dictionary I have two arrays: items = ["item 1", "item 2", "item 3", "item 4"] and values = ["value1", "value2", "value3", "value4"] Which I need to merge into a dictionary as: data = {"items":["items[0],items[1],items[2],items[3]], "values":["values[0],values[1],values[2],values[3]]}

Is there any simple way to do this in python?

A: import collections d = collections.defaultdict(list) for i, v in zip(items, values): d[i].append(v)

For Python 3: import collections d = collections.defaultdict(list) for i, v in zip(items, values): d[i].extend(v) print(d) {'items': ['item 1', 'item 2', 'item 3', 'item 4'], 'values': ['value1', 'value2', 'value3', 'value4']}

A: You can use collections.defaultdict. from collections import defaultdict items = ["item 1", "item 2", "item 3", "item 4"] values = ["value1", "value2", "value3", "value4"] d = defaultdict(list) for value in values: d[value].append(items.pop(0)) print(d) Output: {'values': ['value1', 'value2', 'value3', 'value4'], 'items': ['item 1', 'item 2', 'item 3', 'item 4']}

You could also write this as: d = {} for value in values: d[value] = items.pop(0) But as mentioned in other answers, defaultdict is preferred.

Q: Unable
