Q: Is it safe to put html in javascript files? This isn't a debatable question. It's a factual question for which the answer is simple, yes or no. Does it pose a risk to include HTML in a Javascript file? Are there any potential negative consequences of HTML appearing in a Javascript file? A: It's safe to include HTML files in Javascript files, assuming you're doing so safely, of course. There are two reasons: You can include your own HTML, which should be safe as long as you're not using it to test for a vulnerability in your server You can include external resources, including images, JavaScript, and CSS You should obviously include the Javascript in the body of the page, but you can also include other resources in the tag. As the HTML is not processed, you can do whatever you want in that scope. As with everything in HTML, you should only use this on pages you have full control over and only for pages you need to do this on.

Immunocytochemical localization of renin in pig kidney: fine structural demonstration of renin in a renal juxtaglomerular cell. The present study used a polyclonal antibody against pig kidney renin, raised in rabbits, to investigate the distribution of renin in the pig kidney, particularly in the juxtaglomerular cells. Immunogold electron microscopy was employed
